Covering Risk Disclosures of the Fund:

Hedge funds are registered private investment partnerships, funds, or pools that may invest and operate in different markets, strategies, and instruments (including obligations that are not securities and derivatives) and are not subject to the same regulatory requirements as investment funds, including mutual funds' requirements to provide certain periodic information and standardized pricing and valuation for investors. There are substantial risks in investing in hedge funds. You should carefully consider the following: hedge funds represent speculative investments and involve a high degree of risk. An investor could lose all or a substantial part of their investment. Investors must have the financial capacity, sophistication/experience, and willingness to bear the risks of an investment in a hedge fund. An investment in a hedge fund should be discretionary capital strictly reserved for speculative purposes. An investment in a hedge fund is not suitable or appropriate for all investors. Only qualified eligible investors may invest in hedge funds. The hedge fund offerings in the documents are not reviewed or approved by federal and state regulators. Hedge funds may be leveraged (including high leverage), and a Hedge Fund's performance may be volatile. An investment in a hedge fund may not be liquid and may have significant restrictions on the transferability of actual rights in a hedge fund. There is no secondary market for an investor's investment in a hedge fund, nor is one expected to develop. A hedge fund may employ a single advisor or use a single strategy, which could result in a lack of diversification and greater risk. A hedge fund may involve a complex tax structure that should be carefully read, and may involve structures or strategies that may cause delays in sending important tax information to investors. A Hedge Fund's fees and expenses can be substantial, regardless of any positive return, which may offset the hedge fund's operating benefits. Hedge funds are not required to provide periodic pricing or valuation information to investors. Hedge funds and their managers/advisors may be subject to various conflicts of interest. The above summary is not a complete list of the risks and other procedures involved in investing in a hedge fund and is subject to the more complete disclosures contained in the hedge fund's confidential offering documents, which should be carefully reviewed. Cretum Capital's directors and employees may make personal investments in certain hedge fund products for which Cretum Capital is compensated for introducing potential investors. Any personal investment by a director or employee of Cretum Capital in any hedge fund is not a recommendation or promotion of any specific product.
